Five More "China Initiative" Cases Dropped

In court filings on July 22 and 23, 2021, the Department of Justice (DOJ) abruptly moved to drop visa fraud and other charges against five scientists from China in five separate "China Initiative" cases, including a mathematics and three biomedical and cancer researchers in California and a doctoral candidate studying computer science in Indiana. Prosecutors did not provide explanations in their motions to dismiss. A DOJ spokesman said in a statement that "[w]e have determined that it is now in the interest of justice to dismiss them."

The five Chinese nationals are:

- Lei Guan (关磊), Visiting researcher (mathematics), University of California at Los Angeles
- Dr. Chen Song (宋琛), Visiting researcher (neurology), Stanford University
- Dr. Juan Tang (唐娟), Visiting researcher (cancer), University of California at Davis
- Xin Wang (王欣), Visiting researcher (neurology), University of California at San Francisco
- Kaikai Zhao (赵凯凯), Doctoral candidate (machine learning and artificial intelligence), Indiana University

DOJ announced the visa fraud charges against these five scientists from China about a year ago. It was followed immediately by the ordered closing of China’s consulate in Houston on July 24, 2020. FBI agents began to knock on doors to demand interviews with persons of Chinese descent, creating fear and anguish in the Chinese American community in Houston. During the August 3, 2020, APA Justice meeting, Houston community leaders provided on-the-ground reports and expressed concerns about a "witch hunt for spies" by the FBI to use Chinese Americans as "scapegoat" to justify the political claim, for which the U.S. government provided few supporting evidence. OCA, UCA, Advancing Justice | AAJC, and the Asian American Bar Association of Houston co-hosted a "Know Your Rights" webinar on August 6, 2020, to address the urgent question, "What to do if you are questioned by the FBI or police?" Over 850 persons participated in the webinar.

On December 2, 2020, Former Assistant Attorney General John Demers, who headed the "China Initiative" until June 2021, claimed that "more than 1,000 researchers who had hidden their affiliation with the Chinese military fled the United States," again without supporting data and evidence.

In the interest of justice, it is time to end the "China Initiative." On July 22, 2021, Foreign Policy published Time to End the U.S. Justice Department's Initiative, in which Seton Hall Law Professor Margaret Lewis opined that "The Biden administration should be clear-eyed about the challenge of dealing with a large and genuine espionage effort from a near-peer competitor. But it should do so in a way that both upholds the American value of nondiscrimination and that best positions the United States to be a leader in science and technology in the decades ahead. Achieving these twin aims requires adopting a country-neutral framework that does not accentuate people with connections to China (in part because people with connections to countries other than China also steal technology) as well as deepening outreach efforts with the scientific community to revise grant reporting procedures and other research security measures. It takes more than billions of dollars to strengthen innovation. By reining in the excesses of the present approach and renewing America’s commitment to welcoming the best and brightest minds, the United States can regain an innovative edge that the China Initiative has eroded."
